PRESIDIO HEIGHTS

WELCOME Back

In April, Joie de Vivre unveiled the updated look of The Laurel Inn, a boutique hotel perfectly situated in San Francisco's design-rich Presidio Heights neighborhood. The fresh interiors, by designer Oren Bronstein, are a nod to the site's original 1950s architecture, with American walnut finishes, velvets in a soft blue and brown palette, and midcentury and contemporary artworks by local Bay Area artists. 444 Presidio Ave., S.F., 415-567-8467; jdvhotels.com.

Globe Trotter

Beloved mod-bohemian blogger SF Girl by Bay (aka Victoria Smith) has teamed with East Bay boutique Elsie Green—known for its wanderlust-evoking inventory—to curate a vintage collection. Gathered on a trip to France and Morocco, the Super Marché collection spans rattan furniture and artful ceramics to lighting and vintage textiles. There are also a few custom pieces, including a white lacquer Parsons table available with or without industrial wheels. “I’ve never been a fan of cookie-cutter interiors,” Smith says of the eclectic range. sfgirlbybay.com.

A vintage hanging chair from SF GIRL BY BAY's SUPER MARCHÉ collection, $950.

The EMILY & MERITT macramé table throw, $109.

“We wanted to create spaces that feel as timeless and loved as an old pair of jeans,” says Emily Current, describing her and her partner Meritt Elliott's new decor and entertaining collection for Pottery Barn. The L.A. designer-stylist duo behind the fashion label The Great (and formerly of Current/Elliott) bring their unique mix of classic American style and West Coast ease to the line of cheerful tabletop accents and relaxed bedding. Like the pair's trademark boyfriend jeans and tees, the design philosophy was rooted in casual living. “California is spirited, artistic and warm,” says Elliott. “That’s captured here.” potterybarn.com.
